WHO KILLED STONEWALL JACKSON?—Dr. D. W. Busick, of this county, who since the war has been Register of Deeds, was one of the soldiers that started with the Interim that bore General Jackson off the field that fatal night at Chancellorsville. As an historical incident, from so worthy a source, Dr. Busick's version of the affair is worth giving. He says that Jackson was not hit by a gun man. He was going that night by road down with the Yankees were keeping a watch and sent in when General Jackson's party arrived and was shot. And said General Busick was one of the men that ran him. He carried a corporal's rifle like they were then. They were the men who were going so thick that just before a man's feet, and therefore, putting his leg away stepped him up and he got another soldier springing up and taking the place at the inter. They evidently thought he was shot and history so hig it had one of the most at the time was shot down. But noted, that Jackson was that man. In his opinion, that Jackson was not shot by his own men, he is convinced by many other soldiers who were present. Mr. Robertson, next to him in Cavalry County, was staying on that road and had a gun barrel come off a car from the same carriage and it passed around the time that Jackson was shot and sprung into the woods.—Herald (N.
